TOBACCO-ITS HISTORY.

ILLUSTRIOUS SMOKERS. A new volume has just appeared in London, to be added to the numberless treatises devoted to the history of tobacco and to anecdotes connected with it. Mr. Fairholt, the author of the work, goes gossipping through the story of tobacco and the three centuries of possession which it has held since certain Europeans first beheld a few American savages "enjoying a pipe." Here is a whiff or two f on Mr. Fairholt's well-filled pipe: "Of literary men, Goethe hated tobacco, a very extraordinary thing for a German to do. Heinrich Heine had the same dislike. Of French literateurs, Balzac, Victor Hugo and Dumas did not smoke; but the smokers are Alfred de Musset, Eugene Suc, Merimee, Paul de St. Victor, and Madame Dudevant better known by her sobriquet George Sand, who often indulges in a cigar between the intervals of literary labor, as the ladies of Spain and Mexico delight in doing at all other intervals. Charles Lamb, 'the gentle Elia,' was once a great smoker. In a letter to Wordsworth he says: 'Tobacco has been my evening comfort and my morning curse for these five years. I have had in my head to write this poem for these two years (Farewell to Tobacco); but tobacco stood in its own light, when it gave me headaches that prevented my singing its praises.' Lamb once, in the height of his smoking days, was puffing coarsest weed from a long clay pipe in company with Parr, who was careful in obtaining finer sorts, and the Doctor, in astonishment, asked him how he acquired this 'prodigious power!' Lamb answered, by toiling after, it, as some men toil after

"Of other literary smokers in England we may note Sir Walter Scott, who at one time carried the habit very far. So did the Poet Bloomfield. Campbell, Moore, and Byron, delighted in its temperate enjoyment, as does our present laureate Tennyson, who has echoed its praise with Byron in immortal verse. Robert Hall, when at Cambridge, acquired the habit of smoking from being in Parr's company; and being asked why he had commenced. I am qualifying myself for the society of a Doctor of Divinity, and this (holding up the pipe) is the test of my admission.' When presented with Clark's pamphlet on 'The Use and Abuse of Smoking,' he said 'I can't refute his arguments, and I can't give up smoking.' The learned in the law as well as the dignitaries of the Church have smoked. Lords Eldon and Stowell, and Lord Brougham in early life, indulged thus. The late Duke of Sussex and the Duke of Devonshire gave it aristocratic sanction, and George IV. royally pa-

"Thus, from the throne to the c ttage the pipe has been a solace; it has aided soldier and sailor in bearing many a hard privation. Many would rather go without their rations than their pipe, and endure any hardship with it. Here is a modern instance from the late Crimean war: A lady told me a story of a man, M-, in her division, which shows how much some of them will venture for a smoke. He had just had one of his toes taken off, under the influence of chloroform. It bled profusely; and the surgeon, after binding it up, went away, giving his strict injunctions not to allow him to move, and ordered him some medicine, which he would send presently. She was called away to another patient for a few minutes, and went, another patient for a few minutes, and went, leaving M— with strict orders not to put hie foot down. On her return to his bedside, to her astonishment he was gone; and after some searching she discovered him, by the traces of blood on the stairs and corridor, and protect her person and property from all mar-sitting down in the yard smoking his pipe ital control on the part of the said H. W. P. Junius. sitting down in the yard smoking his pipe with the greatest sang froid. She spoke to The defendant not having entered his appearance him seriously about disobeying orders and doing himself an injury; but he was perfectly callous on the subject of his toe. She succeeded, however, in working on his feelings at within one month after the publication of this orhaving disfigured the corridor, with blood, der, and do what is necessary to protect his interest and he came back saying, 'Indeed, ma'am, I could not help going to have a pipe, for that was the nastiest stuff I ever got drunk on in my life'-alluding to the chloroform.'

WHY DO STEAM BOILERS EXPLODE. At the recent meeting of the Association for the Advancement of Science, Mr. Hyatt of New York presented what we believe to be the true cause. He presented the following table, showing the rapidity with which pressure is doubled by only a slight increase of heat. At 212 degrees of heat water begins to boil; at 868 degrees iron becomes of a

212 degrees of heat 15 pounds to square inch. 480

It was stated by Mr. Hyatt that, from ex periments he had made, this great increase of pressure could be obtained in six or seven minutes with an engine at rest. This rapid doubling of pressure with but a small increase of heat, is due to the conversion of what is termed latent heat in steam into sensible heat. If we immerse a thermometer in boiling water, it stands at 212; if we place it in steam immediately above the water, it indicates the same temperature. The question then arises, what becomes of all the heat which is communicated to the water, since it is neither indicated by the water nor by the steam formed from it? The answer is, it day of January, 1859, till paid, and to attach the enters the water and converts it into steam estate of the said defendant to satisfy the said without raising its temperature. One thousand degrees of heat are absorbed in the conversion of water into steam, and this is called its latent heat. And it is the sudden conversion of latent heat into sensible heat, that produces the explosion. If an engine is in one month after due publication of this order, stopped, even if there is but a moderate fire, if the escape valve is closed, there is a rapid absorption, or accumulation of latent heat. The pressure rises with great rapidity, and when the engineer thinks everything is safe, the explosion comes. That this is the true cause of nearly all the explosions that occur, will be plain to every one who will look at the relations between latent and sensible heat. Professor Henry and Professor Silliman, jr. endorse the view. What then is the security against explosions? We know of no securboilers, and the escape values open at light pressure when the engine is at rest.—Springfield
